DYSPEPSIA.

IS that misery experienced when we suddenly become aware that we possess a diabolical arrangement called a stomach. The stomach is the reservoir from which every fibre and tissue must be nourished, and any trouble with it is soon felt throughout the whole system. Among a dozen dyspeptics no two will have the same predominant symptoms. Dyspeptics of active mental power and a bilious temperament are subject to Sick Headache; those, fleshy and phlegmatic have Constipation, while the thin and nervous are abandoned to gloomy forebodings. Some dyspeptics are wonderfully forgetful; others have great irritability of temper.
Whatever form Dyspepsia may take, one thing is certain,
The underlying cause is in the LIVER, and one thing more is equally certain, no one will remain a dyspeptic who will

TAKE SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

It will correct Acidity of the Stomach,
Expel foul gases,
Allay Irritation,
Assist Digestion,
and, at the same time
Start the Liver to working, when all other troubles soon disappear.

"My wife was a confirmed dyspeptic. Some three years ago by the advice of Dr. Steiner, of Augusta, she was induced to try Simmons Liver Regulator. I feel grateful for the relief it has given her, and may all who read this and are afflicted in any way, whether chronic or otherwise, use Simmons Liver Regulator and I feel confident health will be restored to all who will be advised."—WM. MARIGOLD SEEDS.

Oh, as white as a sheet was the meadow with frost,
And the birch trees were bare on the hill,
While the marigolds—orange and yellow and brown—
In the garden were blossoming still.
But now colder and colder and colder it grows,
And the ground's frozen as hard as a rock,
And the winds whoop and cry, and the clouds hurry by,
Like the sheep of a wolf-driven flock,
And the leaves in a witch dance are whirling around,
And the blossoms lie dead with the weeds,
And there's nothing that's left of my marigold flowers
But a handful of marigold seeds.
But the little dwarf winter time days will go by,
And the dreary black nights will depart,
And the peewee will call in the alder again,
And the grass by the brook side will start,
And the blossoms will feel the warm touch of the sun,
And will hear the soft voice of the showers,
For all hidden away in the marigold seeds
Are the souls of new marigold flowers.
—Marian Douglas in Harper's Bazar.

AFTER LOVE, DUTY.

Pansy Garland was the most heartless little flirt in the world. I have it on good authority—a dozen authorities, for the matter of that, each one of which had sought for the missing organ of Miss Garland's anatomy, but all in vain. Either they were right, and no such member had entered into her composition, or, not relishing their method of vivisection, Miss Garland had carefully placed the said member beyond the reach of the instruments that threatened it.

Whichever the case, it was certain that the young lady had herself performed this same operation of vivisection many times, and she might have been the embodiment of that fabled and horrible monster who feasted on the hearts of his victims, so mightily did she thrive on these dainty tidbits.

But one or two circumstances put an end to Miss Garland's innocent pastime. The first was the sudden death of her mother, followed soon after by that of her father, leaving the girl all alone in the world—for there was no lateral branches of either family—and absolutely unprovided for. Her father died insolvent, having got his affairs in such a tangle, not to say snarl, that there had been only one way to cut the Gordian knot, which he did by breathing out his life in his daughter's arms, commending his soul to the clemency of heaven, his debts to his creditors and Pansy Garland to the guardianship of his executor and heaviest loser by his death, Donald Howard Marshall.

Mr. Marshall knew far more about the necessities of the brute dependents on his bounty than the requirements of a woman's heart, yet his own nature was so pure, so deep, so tender as almost to touch upon the womanly; so strong and noble that the very helplessness of the small, hazel eyed child appealed to it irresistibly, as weakness must always appeal to its opposite.

He had had his romance. Outside the city limits yonder, under a green mound, his heart lay in the coffin of the woman he had once thought to make his wife. For ten years it had lain there "in solemn salvatory," sealed forever, as he believed, with the inviolable seal of death; but Winfield Garland's daughter must be provided for, protected and cared for, and it was for Donald Marshall to do it; there was no one else. If she had been rich and surrounded by friends there would have been no trouble; a thousand solutions to a perplexing problem would have presented themselves, where now there was but one. That one he accepted.

He went to her, offered her his hand, his name, and she, from the moment she looked up into his grave, quiet eyes, knew that she had found her master; and the various authorities, unlike the common run, were correct; her heart had long ago been given, all unconsciously, into the keeping of Donald Marshall. She never questioned his love, although she knew of the green mound where Mary Bains slept her long, sweet sleep.

Petted and spoiled, with the wealth of many a noble heart poured out at her feet, she could not have understood, perhaps, that the treasures of this one were withheld from her, and he did not tell her. The grief that brooded over his life had grown to seem like something real—tangible; he could not tear away the silence of ten sorrowful years and reveal it even to this woman. Yet he knew that he could be loyal, true to her, that, nothing but Mary Bains' green grave could ever come between them. His wealth, home, social position, his protection and name, all were hers but his love. He was making a dangerous experiment, but she did not realize it.

And they were married. One bleak, cold day they turned from the altar and passed out of the church man and wife. The stray handful of snow that had been falling at intervals since dawn suddenly ceased; the gray clouds rent themselves from the zenith to horizon, a glory of crystal sunshine poured down upon the head of an unloved wife, and it showed no more that day; the rift never closed, but widened and broadened until it took in the whole blue shining dome of heaven; the sun went down in a pure, mellow sky. She called him to see it, and he, bending from his great height, gently kissed her brow.

"Thus shall your life be—a bright and cloudless to its setting heaven willing."

She smiled, well content, without fear for the future she had given him to keep, while the twilight fell and shut them in.

Yes, they were married, he with a woman's heart in his possession, she—ah! pity is a sad exchange for the rich, living love a woman craves! For a time the strength of her affection mesmerized into artificial vitality the dead body of his, and she was happy. But it could not be always; the truth came crashing down upon her at last.

It does not matter how she found it out; it does not matter how the heart comes into its bitterness, how the soul claims its heritage of woe. The greatest question is to learn how to accept it, endure it, and—live.

Live! that had to be. She would have died of mortification, grief and pain, but pain, grief and mortification rarely kill. She must live and bear her trouble. That was hardest of all.

What was to be done? He was an every day, prosaic sort of man, with little romance about him. He saw but one remedy.

"We must expect it and live it down together," he said sadly.

"But you will go away, and let me learn to bear it alone?"

"My dear, that is impossible. I cannot give up my business, drop everything and set out in vain wanderings after happiness, which could never be obtained in any such fashion," said this curious young man, opening his eyes.

His creed held that the obligations of life imposed a higher duty than to follow the erratic guidance of an imperfect, emotional nature.

"Then let me go; this is killing me!"

"You wish to get a—divorce?"

He had a fierce internal struggle before he could bring himself to utter that word. He had failed signally, then, in the effort to make her happy, since she could submit to the disgrace—yes, he was old fashioned enough to call it a disgrace—of a divorce suit, and the uncertain position she must occupy in society afterward, in preference to an honorable place at the head of his house.

"A divorce? Yes, anything—anything?"

"Poor child! Poor, miserable child!" he said compassionately. "Forgive me—I cannot grant your request. You do not understand what it involves. No, dear, we can never rectify one mistake by plunging into another. No court in the land can break, in the sight of heaven, the tie which bind us until death do us part. The marriage vows which we took in our sins live in the sight of heaven. There is but one, as I have said: we must live it down together. A woman's rightful place is by her husband's side, under his protection; nowhere else can she live out her full life. Anything so unnatural as a separation cannot be attended with blessing."

"But I may at least find peace," said the girl wearily.

"Peace comes from the honest discharge of duty. Pansy, if we deliberately shirk the one, how can we hope to obtain the other? Neither peace nor even contentment can be founded on willfully broken laws. It is only here—here, where our lots have been cast, our lives united, that we can ever hope to obtain either."

His words were tenderly spoken, but their hard philosophy fired her. It was duty, duty with him. What cared he that all her happiness was changed by the tide of bitterness that flowed through her little world?

But she must save the shattered remnants of her life; away from him somewhere she might put them together and piece out an existence that might not be wholly despised. She would go away; it would be better for them both. But he had always been kind to her; yes, very kind; she could not think of the tender, compassionate way in which he had sought to help her after she had made her cruel discovery, without tears. Perhaps after all they could learn to bear it, to live it down, better together, as he had said. He was strong, and so very, very patient and tender; close to his side, her weakness, hidden in his strength, she might grow contented. But, no, his heart was dead, and she loved him; there was no contentment in the thought; she must go.

She waited fervently until night, then stole into the empty library and laid her little good-by note on his desk. There was the book he had been reading yonder, not far off her own desk, her sewing chair and her work basket. She did not touch anything; she had forfeited the right; she would go now, the room was too much for her. He had preached duty, not love, and her heart cried out for love; and yet he was kind—she would always remember his kindness.

So she stole away out of the house. On the terrace she paused one moment to take her courage more firmly in hand, and then, to her dismay, it suddenly evaporated, wholly and without warning. She could not go—she dared not! She was—afraid. It was a humiliating confession to make, but it was true. The sight of the big, silent world, although it shimmered like an opal in the moonlight, struck terror to her soul. What might not lurk yonder in those gray, sinister looking shadows? No, no, no! She could not go alone, not alone!

She crept into the house, a miserable little coward, for whom there could be no apology; it was cool and sweet there, and safe. Long feathers of silver light were thrown over the carpet; the fragrance of honeysuckles, her favorite flower, came sweeping in at the window on the fresh night air.

There was the faint, far off odor of a cigar somewhere, too.

He was coming, her husband! She could hear him whistling softly as he came up the path. He was not wholly miserable, then. She hurriedly found the note and destroyed it, and was ready to face Donald when he entered, though trembling in every limb.

"Pansy, is it you, dear, and in the dark?"

He always called her dear; he was very tender with his little wife; his one desire was to repair the wrong he had unwittingly done her.

"Where are the matches? I will light the gas," said he.

"No, not yet, Donald, please; I—I do not wish any light; it hurts my eyes, I think."

"Are you ill? Does your head ache?"

"I am well, but I have something to tell you. I would rather say it in the dark, Donald"—with a perceptible effort—"I tried to leave your house just now—desert you, they call it, don't they?"

"But you did not go," he said slowly—very slowly. "Why, dear?"

"I—I was afraid. The world was so big—so solitary!"

"Poor little coward—poor little unhappy pansy! I want you to promise me never to try to desert me again."

He had not spoken immediately. When he did his voice had been steady, but there was something under its very quiet that made her shiver.

"No covert threat, only that great gentleness without which he never addressed her, and yet it seemed throbbing with pity and regret that was almost passionate in its still intensity.

"I will promise, if you wish it, Donald, but if a time should ever come when I cannot endure my life, you will let me go away somewhere?"

"I will let you come and tell me all about it, dear, and we will devise a better remedy," he answered, drawing her into his arms. As her head drooped against his shoulder he felt an odd thrill of pleasure. It could not be that his heart had awakened, for that was lying dead in Mary Bains' grave. "We must bear our trouble bravely, Pansy; the world is full of grief, you know."

Then he kissed her and sent her away; but he sat up late that night, thinking.

After that Pansy spoke of her sorrow no more, but fell into the way of entertaining much company, as she had done when a girl. Donald looked on quietly, glad that she was happy, he told himself; yet he missed the quiet hours they had spent together, and winced at the sound of her gay laughter when other men paid her homage.

He had never observed how pretty she was until she blushed and dimpled at the compliments showered upon her. And how well she talked—with what wit and vivacity! Mary Bains had been sweet and gentle, but Pansy was more—a charming and amiable woman of the world.

Donald Marshall for years had been true to an ideal. Now he awoke to the real, and discovered that he loved his wife as he had never loved that other woman. And she, he bitterly told himself, had learned to do without him.

For Pansy was unfeignedly happy in these brighter and gayer days, and seemed well content to take up her girlhood's pastime just where she had dropped it. To Donald she was sweet and gracious, and nothing more; her eyes were no longer raised to his in mute beseeching for the love he withheld; indeed, they sparkled with happiness and health, and looked at all the world except him.

It was one soft, June day. Pansy had been walking, and came home through the dewy meadows. The twilight had fallen, and Donald went out to meet her.

"I thought you might be afraid," he said, as a sort of apology for the intrusion.

"Oh, no!" she returned, smiling. "People whose lives are full have no room for cowardice, I think."

"Then your life is full?"

"Yes."

"And you have no room for my love? You have discovered it to be quite useless—it has come too late?"

She looked at him, and the sweet face brightened as she put her hands in his.

"No, Donald, it has not come too late. Dear, did you think me blind? I knew you loved me before you knew it yourself. That is why my love is full—why I am so happy. Not value your love? Did you think I could live without it?"

And Donald was satisfied.—Pittsburg Post.

The Spirit of Criticism.

There are people who would find plenty to criticise in heaven itself, supposing they were to be allowed to enter into the hereafter by its pearly gates. They are much to be pitied. It may be a mark of superiority to be always dissatisfied. Philosophers even go so far as to tell us that this feeling of discontent with terrestrial things is an unfailing accompaniment of genius, and that the contented man is of little more account as an intelligent being than a pig in its sty munching acorns. This is all very well in its way, but it must not be accepted as Gospel. It is an utterance on a par with that of the colored man who held up his hands in horror at sight of a European, and declared that white folk were sinfully ugly.—All the Year Round.

Cause for Alarm.

They were playing a friendly little game, and there was a slight pause in the game.

"Well, Jones," said his friend, "I see your wife's back."

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Jones. "Where?"—American Grocer.

IT is now announced for certain that James B. Blaine will not be a candidate for the Presidency. A late dispatch from Washington says: It is a violation of no confidence to say that Secretary Blaine is not a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency next year. That is a settled fact. Not only is Blaine not a candidate, but under no circumstances will he consent to the use of his name. If there seems to be any doubt in the mind of the public in reference to this matter, Blaine will, in due time and in his own way, finally and absolutely dispel that doubt. He is ready to do so now. Blaine is the chief and intimate adviser of the President. If the latter will accept a renomination he will have no stronger, abler and constant supporter than his Secretary of State. So much for a prediction that the immediate future will amply justify.

A MERCHANT of New York tells his experience with dead beats, as follows: "Four years ago I was a merchant tailor, owned three houses and a good business. A Murray Hill dude got in my debt $250; could not get him to pay me. I advertised the bill for sale. He then sued me for $10,000 damages. I then put the bill up in my shop with a note on it—bad debt for sale—he sued me again for $5,000. The Judge at Court said it was libel and an outrageous libel. My lawyer and his lawyer now own two of the houses I once owned. After I settled the cases I met the dude with a suit of my clothes on. I then licked him. Sued me for this, and for this I now have a mortgage on the other house. The only thing I ever got from this one of the 400 was his measure. I have it yet. It is not for sale. My experience is this: I would sooner have had a bad debt than a good lawyer. I now sell for cash."

THE COMMERCIAL BULLETIN of New York, which is reliable authority, in discussing the announced prices of the 1891 extra canned fruits, says: "Coupled with the prices thus far announced for two other brands, it would indicate the Californians are not to be alarmed at the present favorable prospects for large crops all over the country this year, and the consequent probability of a good pack in the East. The foreign markets, it is believed, will take a good many California fruits, and the home demand, except possibly in the East, is not likely to fall off."

JOHN MONEY of Napa is at work on a curious kind of a wagon. It will be a four-wheeled vehicle, in many respects similar to those in general use, but instead of being drawn by horses, will be propelled by means of a gasoline engine. The one having it in charge will be seated at the rear end, where he will be enabled to manipulate both the engine and the wagon by means of levers.

Simmons Liver Regulator cured me of general debility and loss of appetite.—Mrs. E. Fitton, Frankford, Pa.

COL. BOB INGERSOLL gets off on theology sometimes, but his head is frequently very level on other matters. Here is one of his level headed remarks: "Here is a shop. One man in the shop is always busily at work during the day—always industrious. In the evening he goes courting a good nice girl. There are five men who don't do any such thing. They spend half their working hours in loafing and their evenings in dissipation. The first young man by and by cuts out from these and others and gets a shoe store of his own. Then he marries the girl. Soon he is able to take his wife out to ride of an evening. The five laborers, his former companions, who see him indulging in this little luxury, retire to a neighboring saloon and pass a resolution that there is an eternal struggle between labor and capital.

Killing the Scale.

A short time before his death County Horticultural Commissioner E. A. Rogers wrote Alexander Craw, quarantine officer of the California State Board of Horticulture, says the Santa Rosa "Republican," sending him some specimens of diseased apple tree limbs and asking his opinion in regard to branches of trees, Mr. Craw replies:

"Most of the injury from spraying with Paris Green, 1 pound to 200 gallons of water, is caused by not keeping the mixture constantly stirred. The summer remedy in bulletin 53 is good. Prepare and use as recommended. Try the remedy given for brown apricot scales a wash for your prune and plum trees. It is the cheapest and will kill every bug it touches. Use later when the young ones are hatched. In making this wash don't add cold water when cooking. Boil two hours, adding a little hot water occasionally until you have 20 or 25 gallons, after which you can dilute with cold water to make the 40 gallons."

Tragedy Near Santa Rosa.

John Polifka, living about four miles from Santa Rosa, on the Sebastopol road, got into a squabble with his wife Friday night and drove her away from home. Fearing that she had sent in after the officers, and being nearly crazed with liquor, the man cut his throat with a large pruning knife, but not severing the jugular. Word reached here and Deputy Sheriff Fine went out to the scene of the trouble. Drs. Sargent and Boyce were called, sewed up the horrible cut, and Mr. Fine says that while Mr. Polifka is very seriously injured, yet he may recover.—Republican.

Through the Weary Hours

Of many a night, made doubly long by its protracted agony, the rheumatic sufferer tosses to and fro on his sleepless couch, vainly praying for that rest which only comes by fits and starts. His malady is one which ordinary medicines too often fail to relieve, but there is ample evidence to prove that the efficient blood depurent, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, afford the rheumatic a reliable means of relief. Check the malady in its incipient stages, when the first premonitory twinges come on, with this agreeable medicine, and avoid years of torture. Whatever be the rationale of the active influence of the bitters upon this malady, certain it is that no evidence relating to its effect is more direct and positive than that which relates to its action in cases of rheumatism. Like all sterling remedies, however, it deserves a protracted, systematic trial, and should not be abandoned because not at once remedial. It is equally efficacious in dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred diseases.

La Grippe Again.

During the epidemic of La Grippe last season Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, proved to be the best remedy. Reports from the many who used it confirm this statement. They were not only quickly relieved, but the disease left no bad after results. We ask you to give this remedy a trial and we guarantee that you will be satisfied with results, or the purchase price refunded. It has no equal in La Grippe, or any Throat, Chest or Lung Trouble. Trial bottles free at Ed. Wegner's Drug Store. Large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

Happy Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Liver and Kidney trouble." John Leslie, a farmer and stockman of the same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine; made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant same town, says: "Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies. Found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. Only 50c. a bottle at Ed. Wegner's Drug Store.

Andrew Corsi, an Italian quarryman employed in the basalt block quarries near Agua Caliente, met with quite a painful accident last Wednesday morning. A small piece of iron became detached from his hammer while chipping blocks and entered his right eye. It was removed with difficulty by one of our local surgeons and the man's eye saved.

Pasquale Dapello, an Italian laborer, well known in this community by his countrymen, died in the County Hospital, Santa Rosa, last Saturday night, after a brief illness. The deceased was destitute of means and would have been buried at the county's expense had not L. Modini of this place elected otherwise. He sent to Santa Rosa for the remains, had them neatly coffined, engaged a hearse and had mass said in St. Francis' Church. Had the deceased been well-to-do he could not have been laid to rest with more formality and respect. The funeral expenses were footed by Mr. Modini and other Italian residents. The funeral was largely attended, the remains being interred in the Catholic Cemetery.

Why suffer with sick headache and biliousness when Simmons Liver Regulator will cure you.

YOUTHFUL CROOK.

A Boy of Fourteen Robs His Employer of $27.

Charles Bryant, aged 14 years, until three weeks ago an inmate of the Boys and Girls Aid Society's Home in San Francisco, stole between $23 and $27 from his employer, Wm. Brown, last Monday evening, and took the morning train of the Southern Pacific for Vallejo. The young rogue had been apprenticed to Mr. Brown only three weeks ago to learn the barber's trade. The money was taken from a desk in the telephone office during the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Brown, the lad having by some means secured the key to the same. The conductor of the train having a description of the boy immediately recognized him when he boarded the cars at Shellville and arrested him, and upon arriving at Vallejo turned his charge over to an officer. Upon being searched $22.50 of the missing money was found upon his person. The youthful prisoner was brought to this place Tuesday evening and on Wednesday morning was taken before Justice Cheney and acknowledged his guilt. Owing to his extreme youth Judge Cheney very considerately suspended judgment for 60 days and ordered the lad returned to the Boys and Girls' Aid Society, which was done Thursday. If at the expiration of that time he is still incorrigible he is to be returned to this place for sentence.

SUICIDED.

Ah Kum Deliberately Shuffles Off this Mortal Coil.

Ah Kum, a Chinese, aged 43 years, who has resided in Sonoma for over twenty years, committed suicide in a Chinese lodging house in this place at an early hour last Saturday morning by hanging. He took a silk sash and tying one end to the post of his bed and the other end around his neck, swung himself off the bed. The suicide was very deliberate, as when found his feet were resting on the floor and had he so desired could easily have saved himself. He must have died from slow strangulation. The body of deceased was not discovered until five or six hours after death had ensued. True to their superstitious nature not a Chinese in town could be found to touch the body and it was finally cut down by Judge Cheney who telephoned Coroner Blaney for further instructions. Later on in the day that official arrived in town and held an inquest on the remains. The jury decided it a case of deliberate suicide. On Sunday the remains of the suicide were sent to San Francisco for interment, the funeral being one of great eclat. The remains were followed to the railroad train by all the high-toned Chinese, both male and female, in the town.

JOHN SCHUSTER.

His Remains Laid to Rest in Mountain Cemetery.

The remains of the late John Schuster were followed to their final resting place in Mountain Cemetery last Sunday by a large concourse of relatives and friends. The floral pieces were of almost every design known to the florists art and required a special conveyance to carry them to the cemetery. The pall bearers were Geo. Breitenbach, J. E. Poppe of Sonoma and Henry Eberhardt, A. R. Schneider, Louis Hinz and Mr. Miller of San Francisco.

JOAQUIN HANSEN.

His Second Trial---Another Disagreement.

The second trial of Joaquin Hansen took place in Santa Rosa last Tuesday, and resulted in the jury being discharged after being unable to arrive at a verdict after a three-hours deliberation. The accused, who is charged with a heinous offense was remanded back to jail and will probably be tried again. This is the second time a jury has failed to agree on a verdict in this case.

The "No Sweat Club."

Wilhelm Neu, President of the "No Sweat Club," left for Montana yesterday, where he goes to take the position of engineer in a prominent mine in that State. Before taking his leave he resigned his office in the above club, whose members are never allowed on penalty of expulsion to sweat while working. The club only accords that privilege at meal time. We understand that Mr. Neu abdicated the Presidency of the "No Sweaters" in favor "ob de Kentucky Colonel as what carries a cane."

SAVAGE ASSAULT.

A Gang of San Francisco Hoodlums Attack an Officer.

Last Sunday the picnic grounds at Glen Ellen were again the scene of a brutal assault on a Deputy Constable, who was terribly beaten and bruised about the face by a gang of hoodlums from San Francisco. The young ruffians had not been on the picnic grounds more than an hour before one of their number out of a spirit of pure devilishness attacked John Miller of this place, a quiet and orderly man, who has yet to have his first row during a residence of many years in this valley. The attention of Jas. Cowan, a deputy Constable, was called to the assault and he approached Mr. Miller's assailant for the purpose of arresting him, when he was set upon by the crowd and terrible injured about the face by a sharp rock thrown by one of the gang. His nose was fractured and almost severed from his face, and before being stiched together by a surgeon was only prevented from dropping off by a mere shred of flesh.

Will Creamer, who attempted to go to his rescue, was knocked down by a chair and received a larcerated and contused wound on the head that ruptured an artery and before surgical aid arrived he came near bleeding to death.

After the brutal assault the gang separated, became lost in the crowd and made good their escape. The assault is said by eye-witnesses to have been one of the most uncalled for and brutal that has ever taken place in this section.

Cowan and Creamer, who are remarkably quiet and orderly young men, have the sympathy of every law-abiding citizen in the valley, and it is to be hoped that their assailants will be discovered and brought to justice. Both will carry the scars of the brutal assault to their graves.

-GLEN ELLEN GOSSIP-

Mrs. Geo. W. Beatty has been some what ill for the past week, but we are glad to say is now improving.

The Shoe Maker's Union to the number of 1,000, held their annual picnic here last Sunday. It was one continued brawl and fight and a disgrace to civilization.

The many friends of John T. Schuster were shocked to hear of his sudden death in San Francisco. Quite a number attended his funeral, which took place in Sonoma last Sunday.

Mr. Scheibel of Bennett Valley has placed some of his patent gates on the farms of Kohler & Frohling and Dr. O'Donnell. They are ornamental, serviceable, and are giving good satisfaction.

On May 9th a mass meeting of the farmers will take place here for the purpose of organizing a Grange. Much interest is manifested and the N. S. G. W. hall has been secured for the meeting.

The Odd Fellows picnic of last Saturday at this place numbered about 2,000 and was one of the most enjoyable and orderly ever held here. Delegates were present from all the neighboring towns.

A petition is now being circulated asking the Honorable Board of Supervisors to appoint a sufficient number of deputies to protect our people from insult and injury from the lawless mob that infest our quiet burg on picnic days.

Supervisor Cady was among the visitors in town last Thursday. He and Roadmaster Kearney were among the first to recieve a reprimand for fast driving across the iron bridge at this place. It being their first offense they were let down easy.

The farm of Dr. C. C. O'Donnell, which heretofore was a barren waste and an eyesore, is now in a high state of cultivation and in splendid condition. The Doctor has laid off a driveway to his residence, planted an extensive orchard and is making many other improvements.

A gentleman from sunny France, Chas. Masau by name, amused himself last Sunday by blacking the eyes and otherwise mutilating the fair features of one Henry Miller, and for which amusement he paid the modest sum of twenty-five dollars in Judge Morris' Court last Tuesday.

The law prohibiting the sale of liquors to minors is not generally observed here. Had intoxicating liquors been refused to them, the disturbance of last Sunday would probably never have taken place. It should be enforced and the full limit of the law meted out to the guilty parties.

In the fracas last Sunday and while acting in the capacity of Deputy Constables, James Cowan had his nose broken by a cobble stone, William Creamer was cut in the head and John Miller was seriously injured about the face. The cases of Cowan and Creamer were at one time considered very serious, but under the treatment of Dr. Vance of Sonoma all are improving.

WIDE AWAKE.

THE OTHER SIDE.

Young Sullivan Gives His Version of the Recent Difficulty on the Glen Ellen Bridge.

As there are always two sides to a story, and as the object of the INDEX-TRIBUNE in giving publicity to breaches against the peace is in the interest of public morals, and not to injure an innocent or misrepresented party, we give place to the following explanation of the difficulty on the Glen Ellen bridge, mention of which was made in these columns last week, the statement as published being vouched for by a responsible man. The explanation is from Timothy J. Sullivan, one of the principals to the difficulty. He writes as follows:

Mr. Granice—Dear Sir: In regard to the local that appeared in last week's paper, in which I am charged with brutally beating an employee of Ed. Steiger, permit me to say that I am misrepresented, and I can call on several responsible witnesses to prove it. The fact of the matter is there was five of us standing on the bridge when this employee of Mr. Steiger, by name Zbinder, came up and pushed himself between another man and myself and commenced to talk with my companion. I stepped to one side My little brother Johnny was leaning against the bridge and was between Zbinder and myself. Zbinder, who was a stranger to me, struck my brother Johnny with his hand, who inquired why he hit him. His answer was an oath and a challenge to fight. Zbinder then put his hand in his pocket for his knife and stepped toward my brother. I, being afraid Zbinder would stab him, I struck him with my fist and knocked him down. He got up and then came at me and I struck him again. The last blow was on the nose, which caused it to bleed. Then I walked to one side. He then came up and wanted to shake hands with me. At first I refused, but he insisted so hard that at last I agreed to do so. As I was about to offer him my hand, I saw him while extending one hand toward me, put the other in his coat pocket. I hesitated and asked him what he intended to do in making such a movement. He answered, "I mean nothing." I then walked away. He stood on the bridge awhile, and then followed up my brother and myself for awhile to see where we were going. I then entered my house and went to bed, and that was the last I saw of him. I think it is a shame for any one to misrepresent me in this matter, as it has a tendency to injure my business. I heard the next day after the difficulty that Zbinder was trying to pick a fight in several saloons in this place. Please publish this correction and oblige

Yours respectfully,

TIMOTHY J. SULLIVAN.

Glen Ellen, April 29, 1891.

Injured by the Premature Discharge of Blasting Powder.

While engaged in blasting basalt rock in the Weyl quarry, last Saturday, Charles Jansen, a Swede, met with a very painful accident by the premature discharge of a blast. He was badly burned on the left hand and arm and barely escaped hiving his eyesight destroyed. Both optics were more or less injured and became badly inflamed shortly after the accident. The unfortunate man is being treated by Dr. Vance and it is thought that he will recover his eyesight without impairment.

The World Enriched.

The facilities of the present day for the production of everything that will conduce to the material welfare and comfort of mankind are almost unlimited and when Syrup of Figs was first produced the world was enriched with the only perfect laxative known, as it is the only remedy which is truly pleasing and refreshing to the taste and prompt and effectual to cleanse the system gently in the Spring time or, in fact, at any time and the better it is known the more popular it becomes.

A fine business property in Sonoma is offered for sale in this issue. The property is renting at the present time for $60 per month with three tenants. Martin Peter, accompanied by his wife and step children Miss Barbara and Charles Nau, were in town last Saturday and Sunday, and attended the funeral of the late John Schuster, the deceased being a cousin of Mr. Peter's step-children.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

An Honest Man.

One afternoon James McCue, the circus proprietor, educated pig owner, etc., could have been seen lashing his horse into a gallop on Market street in an endeavor to keep pace with a seedy looking sprinter who was dodging along with a fat purse in his hand. McCue had seen the fellow pick it up on the sidewalk, and was impressed with the idea that he was trying to avoid the owner.

Just as the philanthropist pulled up abreast of the runner and opened his mouth to excoriate him the seedy individual tapped a lady on the shoulder and handed her the purse. The lady had not missed it, but was overjoyed at escaping the loss, and fishing a half eagle out or a large quantity of gold she offered it to the man for his honesty. He declined it with thanks, lifted his hat and walked off.

McCue nearly had a fit when the act was concluded, but recovered in time to halt the young man and bestow a hearty greeting on him.

"Honest men are so scarce these times," said McCue, "that I want to testify my appreciation. But why didn't you take the reward when she offered it? You look as though it wouldn't have hurt you?"

"Well, I don't know as it would, but I don't need it just now, you know."

And the man with the seedy clothes reached into his pocket and fished out a handful of "twenties" that bore out his assertion.—San Francisco Examiner.

Spoke Fifty Languages.

The question is asked: Who is the man who has been termed the "Briareus of languages?" Cardinal Mezzotanti, an Italian, who was born in 1774 and who died in 1849, is doubtless the man meant. Many terms expressive of his wonderful readiness in the acquisition and retention of languages have been applied to him, and if all that has been told of his powers in this direction be true the terms were deserved. The cardinal is said to have spoken 122 languages fluently, and to have been able to acquire a thorough knowledge of a language in from one to three weeks. One day when the cardinal was walking in the Vatican gardens, according to a story told about him, the pope sent fifty men, each speaking a different language, comprising all the tongues of Europe and many of those of Asia, to speak to him, one by one, and he responded correctly in every instance in the language in which he was addressed.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Facial Expression.

A man's occupation has a great deal to do with making his facial expression. Studies, or scholarly professions, intellectual pursuits, when coupled with moral habits, brighten the face and give a superior look. An unselfish nature, or love of studies or arts, will make a bright, pleasant face; but, on the contrary, a man may have a face that does not please any one because of pure selfishness. It may be noticed that soldiers get a hard, severe look; laborers look tired; reporters look inquisitive; mathematicians look studious; judges look grave, and a man whose home life is unhappy looks all broken up. The business often makes the face. How often we think this man is a butcher, this one a lawyer, that one a minister, the other a doctor, and so on. It is seldom we are mistaken, for the callings show through the faces. And who fails to recognize the genuine farmer the minute one sets eyes on him?—New York Ledger.

Sulphur, Sulphuric Acid and Sulphides.

Sulphur occurs very widely distributed in the mineral kingdom, partly free and partly combined with other elements. The free sulphur is either found pure, in regularly formed crystals, or intimately mixed with earthy matters. In its native state sulphur is largely found in Sicily and Italy, and as a general rule in abundant volcanic districts. The brittleness of sulphur renders the cleavage imperfect. Sulphuric acid is an important combination, and a very dangerous one in inexperienced hands. Sulphur combined with a number of elements, such as iron, copper, lead, etc., furnishes the sulphides. In the vegetable kingdom sulphur is a small constituent of the albuminous bodies and of certain volatile irritant oils; moreover the vegetable juices contain it in the form of certain sulphates.—New York Telegram.

He Recognized His Teacher.

Chairman Fitz, of the prison commission, occasionally meets some interesting characters in his official walks. After the disturbance in the Charlestown prison, Chairman Fitz visited that institution to inquire into the cause of the trouble. On his tour of the prison his attention was directed to a prisoner who had been one of the leaders in the disturbance, and who had fired two pistol shots at one of his keepers.

"Where did you come from, young man?" inquired Chairman Fitz.

"From Chelsea, sir," answered the prisoner.

"That is my old home," said the chairman. "Do you remember me?"

"Oh, yes," said the prisoner. "I used to be a member of your Sunday school.

Chairman Fitz preserved a stern countenance.—Boston Herald.

AN ISLAND LULLABY.

A moonbeam floateth from the skies,
A Whispering, "Heigho, my dearie;
I would spin a web before your eyes—
A beautiful web of silver light
Wherein is many a wondrous sight
Of a radiant garden leagues away,
Where the softly tinkling lilies sway
And the snow white lambkins are at play—
Heigho, my dearie!"

A brownie stealeth from the vine
A Singing, "Heigho, my dearie;
And will you hear this song of mine—
A song of the land of mark and mist
Where bideth the bud the dew hath kist?
Then let the moonbeam's web of light
Be spun before thee silvery white,
And I shall sing the livelong night,
Heigho, my dearie!"

The night wind speedeth from the sea,
Murmuring, "Heigho, my dearie;
I bring a mariner's prayer for thee;
Solve the moonbeam veil thine eyes,
And the brownies sing the lullabies—
But I shall rock thee to and fro,
Kissing the brow he loveth so,
And the prayer shall guard thy bed, I trow—
Heigho, my dearie!"

—Eugene Field.

The Tramp and the Violin.

A down town music store in Lewiston was surprised on Friday at the entrance of a tramp—a ragged, veteran tramp, who said that he was not vicious, but only unfortunate. "What made you come into a music store?" asked the proprietor. The thin cheeks of the tramp flushed as he said, "I am a musician." Having said that he played the violin they handed him one, and he laid a loving cheek against the fiddle and drew a bow of finished power across the trembling strings. For half an hour he played to a rapt audience, preluding with the skill of the improvisator and weaving the theme into many an airy fancy of the strings. Sometimes he marched up and down the floor playing and talking.

A new light was born in his eye. His rags were forgotten by all who saw him. His cheeks were flushed and his gray hair was tossed back by an impetuous wave of his head. In the imagery of the strings were palaces of delight and strange visions of wasted hopes and years. In the pleading voice of the violin one heard a voice of long ago, a mother's tone and a baby's cry. "That's all right," said he, as he laid it down and a silence fell upon all around, broken by the querulous voice of the tramp as he said, "Gim'me the price of a supper."—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

"German Syrup"

A Cough and Croup Medicine.

For children a medicine should be absolutely reliable. A mother must be able to pin her faith to it as to her Bible. It must contain nothing violent, uncertain, or dangerous. It must be standard in material and manufacture. It must be plain and simple to administer, easy and pleasant to take. The child must like it. It must be prompt in action, giving immediate relief, as children's troubles come quick, grow fast, and end fatally or otherwise in a very short time. It must not only relieve quick but bring them around quick, as children chafe and fret and spoil their constitutions under long confinement. It must do its work in moderate doses. A large quantity of medicine in a child is not desirable. It must not interfere with the child's spirits, appetite or general health. These things suit old as well as young folks, and make Boschee's German Syrup the favorite family medicine. ⑤
